What I Wish I Had Known at 22 a keynote for college students

What job am I going to get? Who am I going to marry? Where am I going to live? That's what I wanted to know at 22. But now, looking back, what I really wish I known at 22 is that there is no dream job, life is what you make it, and the only expectations you need to live up to are your own. In this keynote, Marlene shares stories and perspective to help students think beyond campus to prepare their mindset and confidence for life, relationships, and work after graduation, a.k.a. "adulting".

Step Onto the Field: The Mindset and Community Needed for Achieving That Next Goal a keynote for women

Whether you are launching a side hustle, killing it in your 9-5, or own a full-fledged business, achieving that next level can feel completely overwhelming. What if they don't like me? What if I fail? Why am I the only one who feels like this? Spoiler alert: You're not the only one who feels like this. In this keynote program, Marlene uses stories from her own experience as a small business owner, wannabe adventurer, and community leader to show women the mindset and community that can take them forward toward the next goal.

Show Up: Taking Charge of Yourself, Your Relationships, and Your Work a keynote for emerging leaders

Create a clear mindset about your own story, build trust, and get stuff done - easier said than done, right? But that's what it takes. So how do you do it? Marlene helps you get focused on the things you can control and leverage those for momentum toward your goals. Through stories from her own journey as a small business owner, wannabe adventurer, and community leader, Marlene shares how emerging leaders can confidently move forward.
